To bring the war to an end may imply crippling his material resources, his trade, and his manufactures. To capture at sea raw materials used in the manufacturing industry of a belligerent State, or products on the sale of which its prosperity, and therefore its taxable sources, depend, may be viewed as one of the least cruel objects which the belligerents pursue. Moreover, to capture the merchant vessels which carry these goods, and even to keep the seamen navigating them prisoners, is to prevent the employment of the ships by the enemy as transports or cruisers, and the repairing, from among the seamen of the mercantile marine, of losses of men in the official navy. The assimilation of private property at sea to private property on land, it is seen, would mean that the State to which the captured vessels belonged should indemnify the ship and cargo owners for their loss, which, be it observed in passing, is not only a matter of international law, but is also a question of domestic regulation. In naval war, however, the circumstances are not exactly the same. After the outbreak of war, every shipowner and shipper belonging to a belligerent State knows the risk he incurs in sending ships or goods across sea. He has, moreover, the option of keeping ship or cargo in port, or of paying war rates of insurance, or again the shipper has the option...
