University of Pittsburgh Press, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 150 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. Winner of the 2013 Donald Hall Prize in Poetry The Dottery is a tale of dotters before they are born. In this series of prose poems you meet their would-be-mutters, the buoys they will know, their inner warden, and the mutterers who cannot have them. The Dottery itself is a sort-of pre-purgatory, a finishing school for the fetal feminine. The five sections correspond to the conceptual set-ups interrogated within. In wound, The Dottery is described, as are its inhabitants and their difficulties. In Dual, a gender binary is introduced and (hopefully) eviscerated. Triage establishes the issues that plague both the dotters and those who would bring them out into the world - specifically into the idea of America (I m Erica and I can prefer a hummer to the rose parade). In Fear, failed dotters (out in the world) are described in obit fashion. Finally, in Thief one mutterer recounts how she stole her dotter (a snatched piece) to become a mutter and chronicles both her desires and regrets.
