Excerpt: . . . size and weight have gradually been reduced in the effort to improve type, at present they are much larger than Polish, and about the same size as Tans and Himalayans. Originally, as the name suggests, Dutch came from Holland, where they were bred in large numbers for table purposes. The variety is also well known in France, where it is called the 1: Nicard. The Continental Dutch are much coarser than the English variety, and not bred to anything like the same state of perfection or the same compact type. The markings of the Dutch have not always been as in the present day. An endeavour was made some years back to introduce a modified form of markings, the saddle being reduced to a white band round the neck and the forepaws having stops as well as the hind ones. This improvement, however, did...
