Unhappiness also that comes not from poverty or lack of means, loss of property, jealousy engendered in the rough-and-tumble struggle of life and our high-pressure style of living; unhappiness that comes not from temper or bursts of anger, but from causes lying away back in the animal propensities inherent in the animal called man. Perhaps this infelicity is often intensified by the fact that the two are by law, a law they cannot break, bound to live together in same house, sit at same table, sleep (perhaps) in the same bed. It is said that the causes that lead to infelicity are more rife now than years ago; that they show up in more aggravated form than a century ago. Now, what are these causes? Neurasthenias, disordered, depraved condition of the brain. Are not our insane asylums more numerous and overcrowded? Are not crimes more...
