The union of the states could not endure, half slave, half free. The emancipation proclamation of Abraham Lincoln marked our decision that the Union should endure; and that all that made for division should be swept away. The third great crisis is on us now. The war with Spain is only a part of it. The question is not: Can we capture Manila, Havana, Porto Rico or the Canaries? It is not what we can take or what we can hold. The American navy and the American army can accomplish all we ask of them with time and patience. Battles are fought today through engineering and technical skill, not through physical dash. The great cannon speaks the language of science, and individual courage is helpless before it. The standing of our naval officers in matters of engineering is beyond question. There are a hundred nameless lieutenants in our war ships...
